UNIT 2

The Progressive Era, 1890–1920

COURSE STANDARD EDITION

US.08 – US.18 • 11 Tennessee U.S. History Standards • Grades 9–12

Crowds fill Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington, D.C., during the Progressive Era.

TENNESSEE CONNECTION • THE PERFECT 36

Tennessee cast the deciding vote for women's suffrage: on August 18, 1920 it became the 36th and final state to ratify the 19th Amendment, when 24-year-old legislator Harry T. Burn changed his vote after a letter from his mother (US.18).

One common workbook designed for learner variability. Every student works toward the same Tennessee standards; supports vary the means, not the goal or the ceiling.

★ Tennessee Connection

The Social Gospel movement had Tennessee roots. Nashville's Fisk University and its churches promoted social justice, and Tennessee minister Edgar Gardner Murphy advocated for child labor reform as a Social Gospel cause. Vanderbilt University's School of Religion became a center for Social Gospel theology in the South.

Social Darwinism Explained

Social Darwinism applied Charles Darwin's theory of "survival of the fittest" to human society and economics. Proponents like Herbert Spencer and William Graham Sumner argued that wealth and success were indicators of natural superiority, while poverty indicated weakness. This philosophy was used to justify laissez-faire capitalism, oppose government regulation, and resist social welfare programs. Business leaders embraced these ideas to defend monopolies, low wages, and opposition to labor reforms.

The Social Gospel Movement

The Social Gospel was a Protestant reform movement that applied Christian ethics to social problems. Leaders like Walter Rauschenbusch argued that Christians had a duty to address poverty, unsafe working conditions, and urban problems. The movement taught that salvation involved not just individual souls but also transforming society to reflect Christian values of justice and compassion. Social Gospel advocates supported settlement houses like Jane Addams' Hull House, labor reforms, and government intervention to improve society.

Cultural and Economic Impact

These competing philosophies shaped debates over government's role in addressing inequality. Social Darwinism supported the status quo of industrial capitalism, arguing that helping the poor was futile and even harmful. The Social Gospel provided moral justification for Progressive Era reforms, arguing that Christians must work to create a more just society. The tension between these viewpoints continues to influence debates about welfare, regulation, and the role of government today.

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

Background and Origins

Booker T. Washington (1856-1915) was born into slavery in Virginia and rose to found Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. His 1895 Atlanta Compromise speech made him the most prominent African American leader of his era. W.E.B. Du Bois (1868-1963) was born free in Massachusetts and became the first African American to earn a Ph.D. from Harvard. He co-founded the NAACP (1909) and challenged Washington's approach in his book "The Souls of Black Folk" (1903). Their different origins shaped their different philosophies.

Educational Philosophy

Washington emphasized vocational and industrial training to prepare African Americans for jobs in agriculture and trades. He believed economic self-sufficiency would gradually lead to respect and equal rights. Du Bois advocated for classical liberal arts education, especially for the "Talented Tenth"—the top 10% of African Americans who would become leaders and professionals to lift up the entire race. Du Bois argued that limiting education to vocational training would permanently consign African Americans to second-class status.

Approach to Rights and Equality

Washington favored accommodation and gradualism, publicly accepting segregation temporarily while working behind the scenes for civil rights. He believed economic progress would eventually lead to social and political equality without direct confrontation. Du Bois demanded immediate civil and political rights, opposing accommodation and calling for direct action to secure voting rights, end segregation, and achieve full equality. He founded the Niagara Movement (1905) and later the NAACP to fight through political and legal means.

Political Strategies

Washington discouraged political agitation, working instead through economic development and relationships with white philanthropists and politicians. He built a powerful network called the "Tuskegee Machine" that influenced patronage and funding. Du Bois advocated for political activism, legal challenges, and organized protest. He believed African Americans should vote, run for office, and use every legal means to achieve equality. These competing strategies represented fundamental disagreements about how oppressed people should seek justice.

How did Washington's accommodation strategy differ from Du Bois's demand for immediate civil rights?

- A. Both demanded immediate political rights, but this oversimplifies the complex factors at work, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era, which does not align with the documented historical record
- B. Washington publicly accepted temporary segregation while working quietly for change, whereas Du Bois insisted on immediate voting rights, end to segregation, and full equality through political action

★ Tennessee Connection

Tennessee farmers were active participants in the Granger movement and populism. The Farmers' Alliance had strong chapters across rural Tennessee, and the state's agrarian economy — dependent on cotton and tobacco — made Tennessee farmers particularly receptive to populist calls for railroad regulation and currency reform.

Understanding Populism

Populism was a political movement representing farmers and laborers who felt exploited by big business, railroads, and banks. Populists sought government regulation of monopolies, currency reform, and greater democratic participation to protect common people from wealthy elites. The movement emerged from agricultural distress as farmers faced falling crop prices, high railroad shipping rates, and crushing debt. Populism represented the first major challenge to industrial capitalism's dominance of American politics.

The Granger Movement and Farmers' Alliance

The Patrons of Husbandry (Grangers), founded in 1867 by Oliver Kelley, organized farmers into cooperatives to bypass middlemen and lobbied for state laws regulating railroad rates and grain elevator charges (Granger Laws). The Farmers' Alliance, more politically active than the Grangers, organized cooperatives, pushed for government ownership of railroads, and formed the foundation of the People's Party (Populist Party) in 1892. These organizations gave farmers political voice and demonstrated the power of collective action.

Farmer vs. Railroad Conflicts

Farmers faced discriminatory pricing from railroads that charged more for short hauls than long hauls and gave rebates to big shippers while gouging small farmers. Railroad monopolies controlled the only means of getting crops to market, leaving farmers no alternatives. Grain elevator operators, often connected to railroads, charged excessive storage fees. These grievances led farmers to demand government regulation of railroads as common carriers serving the public interest, not just private profit.

Populist Reform Demands

Populists demanded fundamental economic reforms: banking reform through an end to the gold standard and adoption of bimetallism (gold and silver currency) to inflate the money supply, raise crop prices, and ease farmers' debts; a graduated income tax to shift the tax burden from farmers to wealthy industrialists; government ownership or regulation of railroads, telegraph, and telephone as public utilities; direct election of senators; and secret ballot voting. Many of these reforms were later adopted during the Progressive Era.

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

Factors Leading to Labor Organization

Rapid industrialization created dangerous working conditions with workers facing 10-16 hour workdays, low wages often below subsistence level, and no job security. Child labor was widespread, and economic depressions caused unemployment and wage cuts. Immigration provided cheap labor that undercut American workers' bargaining power. These conditions drove workers to organize unions for collective bargaining, workplace safety, and fair wages.

Union Tactics and Strategies

Labor unions employed various tactics to pressure employers: strikes (work stoppages), boycotts (refusing to buy products from anti-union companies), collective bargaining (negotiating as a group), picketing (protesting outside workplaces), and solidarity (supporting other unions during disputes). These tactics gave workers leverage they lacked as individuals, though employers and government often responded with force.

Key Labor Leaders

Eugene Debs led the American Railway Union and organized the Pullman Strike (1894). Imprisoned for defying federal court injunctions, he later became a Socialist Party presidential candidate, advocating for industrial unions that included all workers regardless of skill. Samuel Gompers founded and led the American Federation of Labor (AFL), focusing on "bread and butter" issues—wages, hours, working conditions—rather than political revolution. He organized skilled workers into craft unions and avoided radical politics, making the AFL the dominant labor organization.

Tennessee's Coal Creek Saga and Prison Labor

Tennessee leased convicts to private companies as cheap labor, undermining free miners' wages. When convicts were used to break a strike at Coal Creek (1891-1892), armed miners freed the prisoners and burned the stockades. The conflict led to military intervention but eventually ended the convict lease system in Tennessee. This episode demonstrated how prison labor was used against free workers and how workers could challenge unjust systems through direct action.

Management and Government Responses

Management used strikebreakers ("scabs"), private security forces like the Pinkertons, blacklists of union members, and lockouts to break unions. Government often sided with business, using federal troops to break strikes, issuing court injunctions against union activities, and prosecuting union leaders. The Sherman Antitrust Act was initially used more against unions as "conspiracies in restraint of trade" than against business monopolies.

- C. Miners supported the convict lease system, but contemporary accounts suggest a different explanation and fails to account for key developments in the broader context
- D. The conflict only affected national politics, although historical sources do not support this conclusion and fails to account for key developments in the broader context

[DOK 3 • item u1-us11-dok3-tc • pre-field-test]

Analyze why government and business leaders often opposed labor unions and used force to break strikes.

- A. Business and government supported all union activities, but this fails to account for the broader historical context, which does not align with the documented historical record, but contemporary accounts and primary sources suggest otherwise
- B. Government remained neutral in all labor disputes, but the historical record tells a more complex story, although this overlooks critical economic and social factors involved, which represents a common misconception about this historical period
- C. Unions never faced any opposition, despite the fact that multiple sources contradict this view despite the fact that multiple contemporary sources contradict this, although historical sources do not support this conclusion
- D. Unions threatened corporate profits and control, so owners used strikebreakers and private security while government deployed troops and injunctions, viewing organized labor as dangerous to economic and social order

★ Tennessee Connection

Tennessee was home to significant industrial consolidation. The Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company (TCI), headquartered in the state before its acquisition by U.S. Steel in 1907, was a major player in the trust era. This acquisition was controversially approved by President Theodore Roosevelt during the Panic of 1907.

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

Rise of Trusts and Monopolies

Industrial consolidation occurred through horizontal integration (buying competitors) and vertical integration (controlling the entire supply chain from raw materials to finished products). Economies of scale made large corporations more efficient, while weak government regulation allowed anti-competitive practices like predatory pricing, secret railroad rebates, and market manipulation. Railroad networks enabled national markets that could be dominated by large firms with sufficient capital.

Impact on Consumers, Workers, and Competition

Monopolies hurt consumers through higher prices, limited product choices, and price-fixing schemes. Workers faced exploitation through low wages, dangerous conditions, and suppression of unions—monopolies could blacklist troublemakers across entire industries. Small businesses were driven out through predatory pricing and exclusive dealing arrangements. Competition was stifled, innovation discouraged, and markets manipulated for maximum profit rather than public benefit.

Sherman Antitrust Act (1890)

Public outcry over monopolistic abuses, farmers hurt by railroad and industrial trusts, and political pressure from Populists led to the Sherman Antitrust Act. The law prohibited "restraint of trade" and monopolization. However, vague language made prosecution difficult, weak enforcement limited its impact, and it was initially used more against unions (as "conspiracies in restraint of trade") than against the business trusts it was intended to control.

Clayton Antitrust Act (1914)

The Clayton Act addressed Sherman Act weaknesses by specifying illegal practices: price discrimination, exclusive dealing arrangements, and interlocking directorates (the same people serving on competing companies' boards). Crucially, it exempted labor unions from antitrust prosecution, recognizing that workers organizing for better conditions was different from businesses conspiring to fix prices. The Federal Trade Commission (1914) was created to enforce antitrust laws more effectively.

How did monopolies impact consumers, workers, and small businesses?

- A. Consumers faced higher prices and fewer choices, workers suffered low wages and union suppression, and small businesses were driven out through predatory practices
- B. Monopolies benefited everyone equally, despite limited evidence supporting this interpretation when examined alongside the available primary and secondary sources
- C. Monopolies had no effect on the economy, yet the available evidence points to a different conclusion, but the historical evidence paints a more nuanced picture

Tennessee's textile mills, coal mines, and factories employed women and children under harsh conditions. The Coal Creek War (1891-1892) in Anderson County was partly driven by dangerous working conditions. Child labor in Tennessee's cotton mills prompted progressive reform efforts in the early 1900s.

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

Industrial Working Conditions

Industrial workers faced grueling conditions: 10-16 hour workdays, six-day work weeks, and wages often below subsistence level. Factories were dangerous with unguarded machinery, poor ventilation, fire hazards, and frequent industrial accidents. Workplaces were overcrowded, noisy, and poorly lit. Workers had no job security, no unemployment insurance, and could be easily replaced. These conditions made industrial work exhausting, dangerous, and often deadly.

Women in the Industrial Workforce

Women worked in textile mills, garment factories, domestic service, clerical positions, and teaching. They faced unique challenges: wages typically 50-60% of men's pay for the same work, sexual harassment, and limited advancement opportunities. Working conditions were often worse than men's jobs, and "protective" laws were sometimes used to exclude women from better-paying positions. Despite these obstacles, women's industrial work became increasingly important to the economy and family incomes.

Child Labor Practices

Children as young as 5-6 years old worked in textile mills, coal mines, glass factories, and agricultural fields. Child workers suffered stunted growth, injuries from machinery, and respiratory problems from factory conditions. Working prevented children from attending school, perpetuating cycles of poverty. Reform efforts gradually produced state child labor laws, compulsory education requirements, and eventually federal legislation, though comprehensive child labor protection came only with the New Deal.

The Triangle Shirtwaist Fire

On March 25, 1911, the Triangle Shirtwaist Factory fire in New York killed 146 workers, mostly young immigrant women. Workers died because exits were locked to prevent breaks and theft, fire escapes collapsed, and there were no sprinklers or adequate safety equipment. The tragedy shocked the nation and led to major workplace safety reforms in New York and other states, including fire safety codes, factory inspections, and workers' compensation laws.

The Muckrakers

Muckrakers were investigative journalists who exposed corruption, corporate abuses, and social problems. Named by Theodore Roosevelt (from a character in Pilgrim's Progress who focused only on filth), these reporters conducted in-depth research, interviews, and undercover investigations. They believed an informed public would demand reform, and their exposés in popular magazines reached millions of readers, shaping public opinion and pressuring politicians to act.

Robert M. La Follette and the Wisconsin Idea

"Fighting Bob" La Follette served as Wisconsin governor (1901-1906) and later as U.S. Senator. He implemented direct primary elections, railroad rate regulation, civil service reform, and workers' compensation. The "Wisconsin Idea" used university experts to draft legislation and administer programs, applying scientific methods to government. La Follette's reforms became a model adopted by other states and influenced national Progressive legislation.

Lincoln Steffens and Ida Tarbell

Lincoln Steffens wrote "The Shame of the Cities" (1904), exposing municipal corruption in St. Louis, Minneapolis, and other cities. He revealed connections between political machines, business interests, and organized crime. Ida Tarbell wrote "The History of the Standard Oil Company" (1904), documenting John D. Rockefeller's monopolistic practices including predatory pricing and secret railroad rebates. Her work helped build public support for antitrust action that eventually broke up Standard Oil.

Upton Sinclair and Theodore Roosevelt

Upton Sinclair wrote "The Jungle" (1906) to expose the exploitation of immigrant workers in Chicago's meatpacking plants. Instead, readers focused on his descriptions of unsanitary meat processing. Sinclair later said, "I aimed at the public's heart, and by accident I hit it in the stomach." His book led directly to the Pure Food and Drug Act and Meat Inspection Act. Theodore Roosevelt, while sometimes critical of muckrakers, used their exposés to build support for Progressive reforms including consumer protection and antitrust enforcement.

Goals of the Progressive Movement

Progressives sought to increase democratic participation and government accountability, regulate big business and break up monopolies, improve working and living conditions, eliminate political corruption, promote social justice and moral reform, and use scientific methods to solve social problems. The movement drew support from middle-class reformers, journalists, social workers, and some business leaders who believed capitalism needed reform to survive.

Initiative, Referendum, and Recall

Progressive reforms expanded direct democracy: Initiative allowed citizens to propose laws through petition. Referendum let voters approve or reject laws passed by legislatures. Recall enabled voters to remove elected officials before their terms ended. These reforms reduced the power of political machines and corrupt officials by giving citizens direct control over legislation and officeholders, making government more responsive to public will.

The Primary System

Direct primaries replaced party conventions for selecting candidates. Previously, party bosses chose nominees in smoke-filled rooms, giving voters only the choice between pre-selected candidates. Primaries let ordinary voters participate in choosing nominees, reducing the control of party machines and increasing democratic participation. This reform spread from Wisconsin to most states and remains the standard method for selecting candidates today.

Constitutional Amendments (16th, 17th, 18th)

The 16th Amendment (1913) gave Congress power to levy income taxes without apportionment among states, enabling progressive taxation and funding expanded government programs. The 17th Amendment (1913) provided for direct election of senators by popular vote instead of state legislatures, reducing corruption and making the Senate more responsive to voters. The 18th Amendment (1919) established Prohibition, banning alcohol manufacture and sale—a reform later repealed by the 21st Amendment (1933) due to unintended consequences.

President Theodore Roosevelt's conservation efforts directly impacted Tennessee. The Great Smoky Mountains region, which Roosevelt-era conservationists championed, would later become Great Smoky Mountains National Park (1934) — today the most visited national park in America.

Activity 4 — Close Read — US.16 ~15 min

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

The Square Deal

Roosevelt's Square Deal promised fair treatment for workers, consumers, and businesses. He positioned the federal government as a neutral mediator between competing interests rather than always siding with business. The Square Deal called for regulation of big business when necessary and conservation of natural resources for future generations. It established the precedent that the federal government had a responsibility to ensure economic fairness and protect the public interest.

Pure Food and Drug Act and Meat Inspection Act

Motivated by Upton Sinclair's "The Jungle," patent medicine scandals, and consumer safety concerns, Roosevelt pushed for food and drug regulation. The Pure Food and Drug Act (1906) prohibited mislabeled and adulterated food and drugs, requiring ingredient labeling and creating the foundation for the FDA. The Meat Inspection Act (1906) required federal inspection of meat processing facilities and sanitary standards, restoring confidence in American meat products.

Trust-Busting Approach

Roosevelt distinguished between "good trusts" (efficient, fair to consumers) and "bad trusts" (abusive, monopolistic). He used the Sherman Antitrust Act selectively, negotiating with some corporations while prosecuting others. Major cases included breaking up the Northern Securities Company (1904) and later supporting the Standard Oil breakup. This demonstrated that the federal government had power over big business and would use it to restore competition.

Conservation Efforts

Roosevelt believed in "conservation means development as much as it does protection." He expanded the national park system with 5 new parks, created 150 national forests covering 148 million acres, established 51 federal bird sanctuaries, and supported the Newlands Act (1902) for western irrigation. Roosevelt established conservation as a federal responsibility, balancing economic development with environmental preservation.

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

The New Freedom Platform

Wilson's New Freedom emphasized restoring economic competition rather than accepting big business as inevitable. Its core principles included breaking up monopolies, reducing tariffs, and reforming banking. Wilson aimed to create opportunities for small business by promoting competition over regulation. This contrasted with Roosevelt's "New Nationalism," which accepted large corporations but regulated them heavily. Wilson's philosophy was summed up as giving "a man with a dollar in his pocket" a fair chance against concentrated wealth.

Federal Reserve Act (1913)

The Federal Reserve Act addressed problems exposed by the Panic of 1907: financial instability, inflexible currency, and concentrated banking power. The system created 12 regional Federal Reserve Banks overseen by a Federal Reserve Board in Washington. Member banks hold reserves with their regional Fed. Functions include issuing currency (Federal Reserve notes), regulating money supply and credit, serving as "lender of last resort," and clearing checks. The Fed stabilized the banking system and remains central to American economic policy today.

National Park Service (1916)

The National Park Service was established to manage the growing system of national parks and monuments. Its mission was to "conserve the scenery and natural and historic objects...for the enjoyment of future generations." First Director Stephen Mather promoted tourism while protecting resources. The NPS professionalized park management, standardized conservation policies, and balanced public access with preservation. It remains responsible for America's national parks, monuments, and historic sites.

Additional Wilson Reforms

Wilson's administration also achieved the Clayton Antitrust Act (1914), which strengthened antitrust laws and protected unions from antitrust prosecution. The Federal Trade Commission (1914) was created to enforce antitrust and consumer protection laws. The Underwood Tariff (1913) reduced tariffs and included the first permanent income tax under the new 16th Amendment. The Keating-Owen Child Labor Act (1916) prohibited interstate commerce in goods made with child labor, though it was later declared unconstitutional.

Summary — In your own words (2–3 sentences)

PROGRESS CHECK • one question

Analyze the immediate and long-term impacts of women's suffrage on American politics and society.

- A. Women's suffrage had no lasting impact, but the historical record tells a more complex story, but the historical evidence paints a more nuanced picture, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era
- B. Women stopped participating in politics after 1920, though this interpretation lacks supporting historical evidence, which ignores significant political and cultural developments of the era
- C. Suffrage immediately enfranchised 26 million women, challenged gender roles, supported reforms in education and health, and laid the foundation for later women's rights movements and gender equality advances
- D. Only electoral politics was affected, but contemporary accounts suggest a different explanation when examined alongside the available primary and secondary sources, but the historical evidence paints a more nuanced picture

Activity 4 — Close Read — US.18 ~15 min

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

Historical Context and Motivations

The women's suffrage movement emerged from the abolitionist movement, with the Seneca Falls Convention (1848) marking its formal beginning. Social changes including women's increased education, employment, and reform activities created momentum. Motivations included belief in natural rights and equality, desire to influence moral and social reforms, response to "taxation without representation," and inspiration from international suffrage movements. The movement took 72 years from Seneca Falls to the 19th Amendment.

Key Leaders and Their Strategies

Carrie Chapman Catt led the National American Woman Suffrage Association (NAWSA) using the "Winning Plan" that coordinated state-by-state and federal campaigns. Anne Dallas Dudley, a Nashville socialite, founded the Nashville Equal Suffrage League and was crucial in securing Tennessee's ratification. Alice Paul founded the National Woman's Party and used more militant tactics including picketing, protests, and hunger strikes. Paul's "Silent Sentinels" picketed the White House, using publicity and confrontation to maintain pressure for a federal amendment.

Suffragette Activities and Tactics

Suffragists employed diverse tactics: traditional methods like lobbying, petitions, speaking tours, and parades; state campaigns to build momentum toward a federal amendment; publicity through dramatic parades, banners, and publications; militant tactics including picketing, civil disobedience, and hunger strikes in prison; and coalition building with other reform movements. Women endured arrests, force-feeding during hunger strikes, and violence to advance their cause.

The 19th Amendment and Tennessee as the "Perfect 36"

The 19th Amendment states: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged...on account of sex." Ratification required 36 states. Tennessee's August 18, 1920 vote was the crucial 36th state. The legislature was closely divided with intense lobbying from both sides. Young legislator Harry Burn changed his vote after receiving a letter from his mother urging him to "be a good boy" and vote for suffrage. Tennessee's vote enfranchised approximately 26 million women in time for the 1920 presidential election.

Key terms first: Women's Suffrage, 19th Amendment. Read once for the gist, then again for evidence.

CLOSE-READ EVIDENCE LAB — for each question: quote the EVIDENCE from the passage above, then write YOUR ANSWER (or answer aloud / diagram it).

Geographer's Lens — US.18 ~12 min

Geographers don't just find places — they explain how WHERE shapes WHAT happens. Work these like a geographer. Built on the Five Themes of Geography • C3 Dimension 2 • SSP.06 (spatial reasoning).

THE PLACES — then explain why geography put them there

Women's suffrage spread unevenly across the country before the 19th Amendment passed in 1920. Use the regions below to map where the vote came early and where it came last — then explain the pattern.

Place	Where	What happened (given)	Why HERE? (your analysis)
Western states (e.g., Wyoming, Colorado)	The West	granted women the vote earliest — Wyoming Territory in 1869	_____
Tennessee	The South	the 36th and final state needed — ratified August 18, 1920	_____
Most Southern states	The South	ratified last, or rejected the 19th Amendment	_____

MOVEMENT & REGION — what's the spatial pattern?

In 1–2 sentences: is this a movement, a cluster, or a whole region? Name the direction or shape it takes on a map.

GEOGRAPHY AS A FORCE — how did location shape the outcome?

How did geography change WHAT happened — who was affected, how far or fast it spread, or who was left out? Use one place above as your evidence.

READ IT LIKE A SOURCE — RESPONSE CHOICE

A map is a source with a point of view. Show your thinking your way — write it, OR sketch a quick arrows-and-labels diagram: what would a map of this make CLEAR, and what would it HIDE or leave out?

Activity 5 — Primary Source / Data Analysis — US.18 ~15 min

Document (text primary source — analyze with HIPPO). Builds SSP.01–SSP.02.

19TH AMENDMENT

“The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.”

Source: U.S. Constitution, 1920. "Amendment XIX." U.S. Constitution, 1920. National Archives, <https://www.archives.gov/milestone-documents/19th-amendment..> Public domain. <https://www.archives.gov/milestone-documents/19th-amendment>

HIPPO — analyze the source (prompt)	Your analysis
H — Historical context: what was happening when this was created?
I — Intended audience: who was meant to see or obey it?
P — Purpose: why was it created?
P — Point of view: whose perspective does it reflect?

[DOK 2 • item us18-q2 • pre-field-test]

How did leaders like Carrie Chapman Catt, Anne Dallas Dudley, and Alice Paul use different strategies to advance women's voting rights?

- A. Catt used organized political campaigns, Dudley used social connections for lobbying, and Paul used militant tactics like picketing and hunger strikes—different approaches that complemented each other
- B. All leaders used identical strategies, but this fails to account for the broader historical context and does not reflect the scholarly consensus on this topic, which does not align with the documented historical record
- C. These leaders opposed women's suffrage, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era, though this interpretation lacks supporting historical evidence, although historical sources do not support this conclusion
- D. Only one strategy was ever used, although this view has been largely discredited by scholars, which does not align with the documented historical record and does not reflect the scholarly consensus on this topic

[DOK 2 • item us18-q3 • pre-field-test]

Why was Tennessee's role as the "Perfect 36" crucial for ratifying the 19th Amendment?

- A. Tennessee's vote was not important, but the historical record tells a more complex story, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era, which does not align with the documented historical record
- B. As the 36th state to ratify, Tennessee provided the final approval needed for the amendment, with Harry Burn's vote change after his mother's letter proving decisive in the closely divided legislature
- C. Tennessee was the first state to ratify, although this view has been largely discredited by scholars and fails to account for key developments in the broader context, but the historical evidence paints a more nuanced picture
- D. The amendment did not require state ratification, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era and fails to account for key developments in the broader context

[DOK 3 • item u1-us18-dok3-tc • pre-field-test]

EXIT TICKET — before you leave [item us18-q1 • DOK 2 • pre-field-test]

What factors motivated the women's suffrage movement, and how did it build on earlier reform movements?

- A. It emerged from abolitionism, gained momentum from women's increasing education and employment, and was motivated by beliefs in natural rights, desire to influence reforms, and international inspiration
- B. The suffrage movement had no historical background, but this oversimplifies the complex factors at work, although this overlooks critical economic and social factors involved
- C. Women's suffrage began only in 1920, although historical sources do not support this conclusion, although historical sources do not support this conclusion, and this view has been largely revised by modern historical research
- D. The movement had no connection to other reforms, which represents a common misconception about the period, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era and oversimplifies the complex factors at work during this period

Your Tennessee Connection

TENNESSEE CONNECTION • THE PERFECT 36

On August 18, 1920, Tennessee became the 36th and final state needed to ratify the 19th Amendment, giving women the vote nationwide. The tie in the state House was broken by 24-year-old legislator Harry T. Burn, who changed his vote after a letter from his mother urged him to “be a good boy” and help Mrs. Catt. Tennessee’s decision (US.18) turned a Progressive-era movement into the law of the land — the last state the whole country was waiting on.

Reflect (RESPONSE CHOICE): How does a local story change the way you understand a national event? Answer by writing, recording, or diagramming.

Think Like a Test-Writer (unit review — open to all)

You met a quick “think like a test-writer” prompt in every standard. Here is the full how-to, once, plus room to write your best questions for the whole unit.

HOW TO WRITE A DOK-3 QUESTION

DOK-3 = strategic thinking: the reader must analyze, compare, evaluate, or justify using evidence — and there should be more than one defensible answer (not a fact you can just look up).

Sentence starters: “Why did _____ lead to _____?” • “Which mattered more — _____ or _____ — and why?” • “What is the BEST evidence that _____?” • “Evaluate whether _____.” • “Defend or challenge: _____.”

Frame: [Analyze / Evaluate / Justify] + [something from this unit] + “using evidence.”

Quick check: does my question make the reader THINK and use evidence? If yes, it's DOK-3.

The Progressive Era — Reached and Left Out

This section complicates the Progressive-era narrative: who reform reached, who it excluded, and who organized in response. It is History Hack-authored instructional synthesis grounded in this unit's sourced record — not a primary source.

Industrial Workers

Long hours, low pay, and dangerous conditions drove the rise of unions and strikes (US.11); the Coal Creek War (1891–92) in Anderson County, Tennessee pitted miners against the convict-lease system.

Women & Children

Women and children worked textile mills, mines, and factories under harsh conditions (US.13); Progressive reformers pushed the first child-labor and workplace-safety laws, and the suffrage movement won the vote in 1920 (US.18).

African Americans

Booker T. Washington and W.E.B. Du Bois offered competing paths to advancement under Jim Crow (US.09); most Progressive reforms did little to challenge segregation, and Black Americans built their own institutions and the early civil-rights organizing that followed.

Immigrants & the Urban Poor

Muckrakers exposed tenement poverty, unsafe food, and machine politics (US.14); reformers pressed for regulation of trusts and monopolies (US.12), while many immigrants were still met with nativism.

Residual note (known follow-up): sourced visuals and named Key-Figure entries for these histories remain pending.

Unit Reflection

Return to the unit's big question: as reformers tried to fix the problems of the industrial age, whose lives improved, who was left out, and how much did government change? Write a final claim with two pieces of evidence from different standards.
