TENNESSEE CONNECTION • THE SCOPES TRIAL & THE GRAND OLE OPRY

Two of the decade's biggest stories happened in Tennessee in 1925. In Dayton, the Scopes "Monkey Trial" (US.36) put teacher John Scopes on trial for teaching evolution — Clarence Darrow vs. William Jennings Bryan — in a case broadcast to the nation. That same year in Nashville, WSM radio launched what became the Grand Ole Opry (US.30), making the city the home of country music.

One common workbook designed for learner variability. Every student works toward the same Tennessee standards; supports vary the means, not the goal or the ceiling.

Standard US.28 — The Great Migration

TN Academic Standard US.28: Analyze the impact of the Great Migration of African Americans that began in the post-World War I era from the rural South to the industrial regions of the Northeast and Midwest. (TCA)

LEARNING TARGETS — I can...

- I can analyze the impact of the Great Migration of African Americans from the rural South to the industrial regions of the Northeast and Midwest in the post-World War I era.

Lenses for this standard: History • Geography • Economics • Tennessee Connection

CORE PATH — the same for every student

Same rigor for everyone: analyze the sources and vocabulary, then show what you learned on the Practice Quiz and the CER.

UDL and MTSS give you flexible ways in — they never lower the bar.

★ Tennessee Connection

Memphis and Nashville were key departure points for African Americans migrating northward during the Great Migration. Tennessee's Black communities, particularly in West Tennessee, saw significant population shifts to cities like Chicago, Detroit, and St. Louis.

SET YOUR GOAL (self-direction)

My goal for this standard — what will I be able to do, and how will I show it?

HOOK — think before you dig in

The Great Migration: Analyze the impact of the Great Migration of African Americans that began in the post-World War I era from the rural South to the industrial regions of the Northeast and Midwest. (TCA). Who gained, who was left out — and why does it still matter?

PROGRESS CHECK • one question

What social and cultural changes occurred in both Southern communities that lost population and Northern cities that gained it?

- A. Southern communities lost population and economic vitality while Northern cities saw neighborhood formation, business district growth, cultural flowering like the Harlem Renaissance, but also new racial tensions
- B. Neither region experienced significant changes, but contemporary accounts suggest a different explanation, though this interpretation lacks supporting historical evidence, although this overlooks critical economic and social factors involved
- C. Only Northern cities experienced changes, yet the available evidence points to a different conclusion, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era despite the fact that multiple contemporary sources contradict this
- D. Southern communities grew stronger after migration, although historical sources do not support this conclusion and oversimplifies the complex factors at work during this period, though this interpretation lacks supporting historical evidence

Activity 4 — Close Read — US.28 ~15 min

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

Push Factors: Reasons to Leave the South

Jim Crow laws enforced legal segregation and disenfranchisement, restricting opportunities for African Americans. The sharecropping system kept them in poverty through economic exploitation. Racial violence including lynchings, KKK terrorism, and legal injustice created dangerous conditions. Inferior segregated schools limited educational advancement, while the boll weevil destroyed cotton crops, reducing farm jobs.

Pull Factors: Attractions of the North

World War I created labor shortages in Northern factories, opening industrial jobs with significantly higher wages—average $1,000+ annually versus $300 in the South. Northern cities offered better schools and colleges, the ability to vote and participate in politics, less legally enforced segregation, and better housing, healthcare, and cultural opportunities.

Economic Opportunities Comparison

In the South, African Americans were limited to sharecropping, domestic service, and agricultural labor. Northern cities offered factory work in steel mills, meatpacking, and railroads, plus domestic service, factory positions, and clerical work for women. Northern cities also allowed African American entrepreneurship and professional services.

Social and Cultural Changes

Southern communities lost significant working-age population, affecting agricultural production and weakening traditional networks. Northern cities like Chicago, Detroit, and New York saw massive population growth, creation of African American neighborhoods and business districts, and the cultural flowering that led to the Harlem Renaissance. Social tensions arose from competition for jobs and housing.

Long-term Implications

The Great Migration transformed America from rural to urban society. Concentrated African American voters in Northern cities increased political influence. Urban communities provided the base for future civil rights organizing. The migration created an African American middle class and spread jazz, blues, literature, and art from concentrated urban communities. Approximately 6 million African Americans migrated between 1910-1970.

Key terms first: Great Migration, First Red Scare. Read once for the gist, then again for evidence.

Geographer's Lens — US.28 ~12 min

Geographers don't just find places — they explain how WHERE shapes WHAT happens. Work these like a geographer. Built on the Five Themes of Geography • C3 Dimension 2 • SSP.06 (spatial reasoning).

THE PLACES — then explain why geography put them there

The Great Migration moved millions of Black Americans out of the rural South to Northern and Midwestern cities. Use the list below to map where people left and where they went, then explain the pattern.

Place	Where	What happened (given)	Why HERE? (your analysis)
Rural South (Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia)	The South	origin — sharecropping, Jim Crow, and racial violence
Chicago	Illinois	destination — meatpacking and factory jobs
Detroit	Michigan	destination — automobile-industry jobs
Harlem / New York City	New York	destination — center of the Harlem Renaissance
Cleveland	Ohio	destination — industrial jobs

MOVEMENT & REGION — what's the spatial pattern?

In 1–2 sentences: is this a movement, a cluster, or a whole region? Name the direction or shape it takes on a map.

GEOGRAPHY AS A FORCE — how did location shape the outcome?

How did geography change WHAT happened — who was affected, how far or fast it spread, or who was left out? Use one place above as your evidence.

READ IT LIKE A SOURCE — RESPONSE CHOICE

[DOK 2 • item us30-q2 • pre-field-test]

How did economic opportunities in Northern cities compare to those available in the rural South?

- A. Northern industrial wages averaged $1,000+ annually versus $300 in the South, with factory jobs, business opportunities, and professional careers available that were closed to African Americans in the segregated South
- B. Economic opportunities were identical in both regions, which does not align with the documented historical record when examined alongside the available primary and secondary sources, which does not align with the documented historical record
- C. The South offered better economic opportunities, but contemporary accounts suggest a different explanation, which represents a common misconception about this historical period, which does not align with the documented historical record
- D. There were no jobs available in Northern cities, but this oversimplifies the complex factors at work, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era, which does not align with the documented historical record

[DOK 2 • item q-us30-dok2-1 • pre-field-test]

What were push factors that caused the Great Migration?

- A. Created economic independence and served the needs of segregated Black communities
- B. Jim Crow segregation, racial violence, and limited economic opportunity in farming
- C. Published train schedules, job listings, and stories about Northern opportunities
- D. They reflected the experiences and struggles of rural and working-class Americans

[DOK 3 • item u1-us28-dok3-tc • pre-field-test]

What social and cultural changes occurred in both Southern communities that lost population and Northern cities that gained it?

EXIT TICKET — before you leave [item us30-q1 • DOK 2 • pre-field-test]

What push factors drove African Americans to leave the rural South, and what pull factors attracted them to Northern industrial cities?

- A. Economic prosperity in the South kept most African Americans there, but this oversimplifies the complex factors at work despite the fact that multiple contemporary sources contradict this
- B. African Americans migrated primarily for climate reasons, but this fails to account for the broader historical context despite the fact that multiple contemporary sources contradict this
- C. Push factors included Jim Crow laws, sharecropping poverty, racial violence, and limited education; pull factors included industrial jobs, higher wages, voting rights, and less legal segregation
- D. The migration was forced by government relocation programs, yet the available evidence points to a different conclusion, but closer analysis reveals a more complicated historical reality

Radio's Impact on Popular Culture

Radio became the first medium to reach the entire nation simultaneously. Ownership grew from 60,000 sets in 1922 to 10 million by 1929. Programming included music, news, sports, comedy shows, and serialized dramas. Radio created shared experiences across geographic and cultural boundaries, gave birth to consumer culture through commercialized advertising, and changed political campaigns as politicians could reach voters directly.

Film Industry Growth

Silent films made stars like Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, and Rudolph Valentino global celebrities. Elaborate movie palaces made moviegoing a glamorous experience. Hollywood emerged as the entertainment capital, creating the "dream factory" mythology. By 1929, 50 million Americans attended movies weekly. The "talkies" revolution began in 1927 with "The Jazz Singer," which introduced sound films.

Charlie Chaplin (1889-1977)

Chaplin created "The Tramp"—an iconic character with bowler hat, cane, and mustache. He pioneered physical comedy and film techniques, achieving global appeal since silent films crossed language barriers. His character represented the common man struggling against modern industrial society. He founded United Artists studio and created social commentary films like "Modern Times."

Charles Lindbergh (1902-1974)

"Lucky Lindy" completed the first solo nonstop transatlantic flight on May 20-21, 1927. He became a media sensation with ticker-tape parades, endorsements, and constant press coverage. As an aviation pioneer, he promoted commercial aviation and technological progress. Lindbergh embodied American ingenuity and adventurous spirit, becoming a national hero through newspapers, radio, and newsreels.

Babe Ruth (1895-1948)

The "Sultan of Swat" transformed baseball from a pitching game to a hitting game. His 60 home runs in 1927 captivated national attention. His larger-than-life personality with a flamboyant lifestyle made him a cultural icon. Radio coverage brought baseball games to millions of fans, and Ruth became the first athlete to capitalize on celebrity for endorsements. Yankee Stadium was called "The House that Ruth Built."

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

Country Music Roots

Country music originated from rural Southern folk traditions, Scottish-Irish ballads, and gospel music. Instruments included fiddle, banjo, guitar, harmonica, and later steel guitar. Themes centered on rural life, family, religion, hardship, and traditional values. Regional variations included Appalachian mountain music, Western swing, and honky-tonk. The 1920s recording industry brought rural music to national audiences.

Blues Music Evolution

Blues evolved from African American work songs, field hollers, spirituals, and African musical traditions. The Mississippi Delta was the birthplace of Delta blues with its distinctive guitar style. Urban blues developed as African Americans migrated to cities like Chicago. The standard 12-bar structure became the foundation for popular music. Themes addressed love, loss, hardship, and resilience.

The Grand Ole Opry

Beginning as "WSM Barn Dance" in Nashville on November 28, 1925, it was created and hosted by George D. Hay, the "Solemn Old Judge." It became the "Grand Ole Opry" in 1927. Saturday night live radio broadcasts reached millions across America, making Nashville the center of country music. The Opry preserved and promoted traditional American folk music, launched countless careers, and drew tourists to Nashville. The Ryman Auditorium hosted the Opry from 1943-1974.

W.C. Handy (1873-1958): Father of the Blues

W.C. Handy was the first to publish blues compositions for mainstream audiences. His "Memphis Blues" (1912) was the first published blues composition, and "St. Louis Blues" (1914) became a blues standard recorded by countless artists. A trained musician who studied European classical music, Handy combined African American folk traditions with formal musical notation. He founded Handy Brothers Music Company and proved African American music could achieve commercial success.

Bessie Smith (1894-1937): Empress of the Blues

Bessie Smith was the most popular and influential blues singer of the 1920s. Her Columbia Records contract made her the highest-paid Black performer of her era. Her powerful voice featured emotional depth and perfect pitch on songs like "Downhearted Blues" and "St. Louis Blues." She earned up to $2,000 per week during peak years, broke racial barriers, and performed for integrated audiences. Her influence extended to generations of singers including Billie Holiday and Janis Joplin.

Activity 4 — Close Read — US.31 ~15 min

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

Early Aviation Development

The Wright Brothers achieved the first powered flight at Kitty Hawk, North Carolina in 1903. World War I accelerated aircraft development and pilot training. The Post Office began regular airmail routes in 1918, and first passenger airlines were established in the early 1920s. Charles Lindbergh's solo transatlantic flight in 1927 captured public imagination and promoted commercial aviation.

Aviation's Revolutionary Impact

Air travel reduced cross-country travel time from days to hours and connected previously isolated regions to the national economy. Commercial passenger miles increased from 6,000 in 1926 to 173,000 in 1929. Aviation created new industries and employment opportunities, facilitated global business and diplomatic relations, and enhanced national defense capabilities. Infrastructure including airports and navigation systems developed rapidly.

Spread of Electricity: Urban Transformation

By 1930, 85% of urban homes had electricity, with power generation increasing from 6 billion kilowatt-hours in 1902 to 117 billion in 1929. Electric streetlights improved safety and extended business hours. Electric trolleys and subways revolutionized urban mobility. Electric elevators made skyscrapers practical. Electric signs, movie theaters, and amusement parks transformed urban entertainment.

Household and Industrial Transformation

Electric household appliances—vacuum cleaners, washing machines, electric irons, and refrigerators—reduced domestic labor and improved living conditions. In manufacturing, electric motors increased productivity and allowed flexible factory layouts. New industries emerged in electrical equipment manufacturing, power generation, and appliance production. Electric lighting improved workplace safety and extended productive hours.

Rural Electrification Gap

Only 10% of rural homes had electricity by 1930 due to cost and distance. This limited rural access to modern conveniences and productivity improvements. Where available, electric-powered farm equipment improved agricultural efficiency. The rural-urban electrification gap wouldn't be addressed until New Deal programs like TVA brought electricity to underserved areas.

What was the impact of electrical power expansion on urban and rural communities during the 1920s?

- A. 85% of urban homes were electrified by 1930, transforming city life with lighting, transportation, and appliances, but only 10% of rural homes had electricity, creating a significant urban-rural divide
- B. Electricity was equally available everywhere, which represents a common misconception about the period, but closer analysis reveals a more complicated historical reality and does not reflect the scholarly consensus on this topic
- C. Rural areas had more electricity than cities, which does not reflect the consensus among historians when examined alongside the available primary and secondary sources, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era
- D. Electricity had no significant impact on daily life, yet the available evidence points to a different conclusion and oversimplifies the complex factors at work during this period

[DOK 2 • item us33-q3 • pre-field-test]

How did new technologies like radio, household appliances, and automobiles transform daily life and social relationships?

- A. New technologies had little effect on daily life, which does not reflect the consensus among historians and does not reflect the scholarly consensus on this topic, but contemporary accounts and primary sources suggest otherwise
- B. Radio created shared cultural experiences, appliances reduced domestic labor and improved living conditions, and automobiles enabled mobility and suburban growth, fundamentally changing work, leisure, and family patterns
- C. Only wealthy families could afford new technologies, but the historical record tells a more complex story, but the historical evidence paints a more nuanced picture when examined alongside the available primary and secondary sources
- D. Technologies were primarily used in factories, but contemporary accounts suggest a different explanation and oversimplifies the complex factors at work during this period, but closer analysis reveals a more complicated historical reality

Evaluate whether technological innovations of the 1920s improved quality of life for all Americans or primarily benefited certain groups.

- A. All Americans benefited equally from new technologies, but this fails to account for the broader historical context when examined alongside the available primary and secondary sources
- B. Technology only benefited the wealthy, despite the fact that multiple sources contradict this view, although historical sources do not support this conclusion
- C. Rural Americans benefited more than urban residents, which does not align with the documented historical record, although historical sources do not support this conclusion
- D. Urban, middle-class Americans benefited most from electricity and appliances, while rural areas lacked electrification and many workers faced job displacement from mechanization

★ Tennessee Connection

The automobile revolution transformed Tennessee. By the 1920s, road-building campaigns connected Tennessee's cities, and the Dixie Highway linked Tennessee to Florida tourism. Nashville and Memphis became automobile distribution centers, and the state's economy shifted as rural Tennesseans gained access to urban markets.

Henry Ford's Revolutionary Role

Ford founded the Ford Motor Company in 1903 with the goal of building affordable cars for average Americans. The Model T (1908-1927), nicknamed "Tin Lizzie," became America's first mass-produced automobile. Ford's assembly line (1913) used moving conveyor belts, interchangeable parts, and division of labor to revolutionize manufacturing. These innovations reduced Model T assembly time from 12 hours to 93 minutes.

Economic Impact on Manufacturing

The assembly line became the standard for mass production industries, dramatically increasing productivity. Ford reduced Model T prices from $825 (1908) to $290 (1925), making automobiles affordable for middle-class consumers. By 1927, Ford had produced 15 million Model Ts and controlled 50% of the automobile market. His methods spread to other industries, establishing U.S. industrial leadership.

Impact on Labor Practices

Ford's $5 Day (1914) doubled typical industrial wages to reduce turnover and increase productivity. He reduced the workday from 9-10 hours to 8 hours. These innovations cut employee turnover from 370% to 16% and created a workforce that could afford to buy the products they made. However, assembly line work was repetitive, and Ford strongly resisted unionization.

Societal Transformation

Automobiles gave Americans unprecedented personal mobility, ending rural isolation and enabling suburban development. Cars changed dating and courtship patterns, providing privacy and mobility for young people. Sunday drives and family vacations became popular activities. Automobile ownership became a measure of social success and enabled new patterns of work, shopping, and leisure.

Supporting Industries and Infrastructure

The automobile industry drove expansion of steel, rubber, glass, and petroleum industries. Gas stations, repair shops, motels, and auto parts stores proliferated. Massive road construction programs transformed the American landscape. Detroit became "Motor City," attracting workers nationwide. The automobile industry directly and indirectly employed millions of Americans.

Historical Context and Characteristics

The Harlem Renaissance (approximately 1918-1937, peak in 1920s) was centered in Harlem, Manhattan. The Great Migration created concentrated urban African American communities. Post-WWI, Black veterans returned with new expectations. The "New Negro Movement" promoted pride in African American identity. Key venues included the Cotton Club, Apollo Theater, and Schomburg Center. Crisis and Opportunity magazines showcased new talent.

Impact on African American Arts

The Renaissance produced an explosion of creativity in literature, music, visual arts, and theater. New poetry forms expressed African American experience and pride. Realistic novels challenged stereotypes. Artists like Aaron Douglas created distinctive African American visual styles. Plays explored Black themes, and musical theater shows like "Shuffle Along" brought Black performers to Broadway.

Louis Armstrong (1901-1971)

Armstrong transformed jazz from ensemble music to a soloist-centered art form. His revolutionary trumpet technique and improvisational skills redefined the genre. He pioneered scat singing and recorded influential sessions with his Hot Five and Hot Seven groups. His charismatic personality made jazz accessible to mainstream audiences, and he became a cultural ambassador spreading American jazz internationally.

Duke Ellington (1899-1974)

Ellington led a sophisticated orchestra for over 50 years, composing over 1,000 works including "Mood Indigo" and "Sophisticated Lady." His Cotton Club residency (1927-1931) made him nationally famous. A master of orchestration who blended jazz with classical music, Ellington elevated jazz to serious art form status. He insisted on dignity and respect for African American musicians.

Langston Hughes and Zora Neale Hurston

Hughes (1902-1967) captured African American experience in poetry collections like "The Weary Blues" (1926), incorporating jazz rhythms and vernacular language. His "Dream Deferred" questioned American equality. Hurston (1891-1960) wrote the masterpiece "Their Eyes Were Watching God" (1937), collected African American folklore, and created strong female protagonists. Both used authentic voice to celebrate Black culture while challenging discrimination.

What contributions did writers like Langston Hughes and Zora Neale Hurston make to American literature and African American identity?

- A. Their work had limited literary significance, despite limited evidence supporting this interpretation, and this view has been largely revised by modern historical research, but contemporary accounts and primary sources suggest otherwise
- B. Hughes captured African American experience through jazz-influenced poetry and social commentary, while Hurston preserved folk traditions and created strong female characters, both using authentic voice to celebrate Black culture
- C. They wrote only for academic audiences, which does not align with the documented historical record, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era and fails to account for key developments in the broader context
- D. Their work focused exclusively on protest, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era, but closer analysis reveals a more complicated historical reality, which represents a common misconception about this historical period

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

Flappers and Cultural Significance

Flappers were young, modern women who rejected Victorian values. Their characteristics included short "bob" haircuts, short skirts, makeup, and fashionable clothing. They smoked, drank, danced, dated unchaperoned, and spoke frankly about sexuality. Flappers emphasized individual choice over family duty, exercised newly won voting rights, and became targets of advertising. They sparked debates about morality and family values.

Birth Control and Reproductive Rights

Margaret Sanger founded the American Birth Control League (predecessor to Planned Parenthood), opened the first birth control clinic in Brooklyn (1916), and was arrested multiple times for distributing contraceptive information. Average family size decreased from 7 children (1800) to 3 children (1930). Birth control gave women more control over their bodies, improved maternal health, and allowed women to pursue education and careers.

Clerical and Office Jobs

The service economy created millions of clerical positions. Women in clerical work increased from 75,000 (1900) to 1.4 million (1930). Jobs included secretaries, stenographers, typists, telephone operators, and bookkeepers. Office work paid better than factory or domestic work and offered cleaner, safer conditions. However, women faced lower pay than men, limited advancement, and "marriage bars" requiring women to quit when they married.

Rise of Women's Colleges

The Seven Sisters and other women's colleges provided education equivalent to men's institutions. Programs prepared women for teaching, nursing, social work, and business careers. Female professors served as role models, and alumni networks helped graduates find employment. Women's colleges challenged assumptions about female intellectual capabilities and produced leaders in progressive reform movements.

Limitations and Contradictions

Despite changes, most women remained in traditional roles. A "glass ceiling" limited advancement to executive positions. Pay inequality persisted with women earning significantly less for similar work. Flapper culture was primarily urban and middle-class. Conservative backlash criticized modern women as immoral. Most professional schools still excluded women, and marriage often ended careers.

[DOK 2 • item us36-q2 • pre-field-test]

What impact did increased access to birth control have on women's lives and family planning decisions?

- A. Birth control enabled women to control family size (average dropped from 7 to 3 children), improve maternal health, pursue education and careers, and gain greater autonomy over their bodies and futures
- B. Birth control had no significant impact, but contemporary accounts suggest a different explanation despite the fact that multiple contemporary sources contradict this and does not reflect the scholarly consensus on this topic
- C. Birth control was universally accepted, despite the fact that multiple sources contradict this view and oversimplifies the complex factors at work during this period, which does not align with the documented historical record
- D. Only wealthy women had access to birth control, yet the available evidence points to a different conclusion, although this overlooks critical economic and social factors involved

[DOK 2 • item us36-q3 • pre-field-test]

How did expansion of clerical and office jobs provide new economic opportunities for women?

★ Tennessee Connection

The Ku Klux Klan was originally founded in Pulaski, Tennessee, in 1865 by former Confederate soldiers. The KKK's resurgence in the 1920s was felt across Tennessee, with Klan chapters active in Nashville, Knoxville, and Memphis. The NAACP organized counter-efforts, and Tennessee became a battleground for civil liberties.

Activity 4 — Close Read — US.35 ~15 min

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

First Red Scare (1919-1920)

Fear of communist revolution spreading from Russia combined with labor strikes and anarchist bombings created hysteria. Attorney General Palmer authorized raids on suspected radicals, arresting over 6,000 people, many without warrants. Hundreds of immigrants were deported without due process. Socialist publications were banned, and meetings disrupted. Constitutional rights including free speech and due process were violated in the name of security.

Immigration Quota Acts of the 1920s

The Emergency Quota Act (1921) limited immigration to 3% of each nationality present in 1910. The National Origins Act (1924) reduced this to 2% based on 1890 census, favoring Northern and Western Europeans while completely banning Asian immigration. Total annual immigration was capped at 150,000. These laws dramatically altered American demographics and separated many families.

Resurgence of the Ku Klux Klan

The film "Birth of a Nation" (1915) romanticized the original KKK and inspired revival. The new Klan opposed Catholics, Jews, and immigrants in addition to African Americans, extending beyond the South to Midwest and West. Peak membership reached 4-5 million in the mid-1920s. The KKK engaged in violence, influenced elections, and promoted economic boycotts before scandals caused decline by 1930.

Ida B. Wells (1862-1931)

Wells documented and publicized lynching statistics through investigative journalism. Her work "Southern Horrors" (1892) exposed myths about lynching. She spoke internationally to build pressure against racial violence and co-founded the NAACP. Wells advocated for both civil rights and women's suffrage despite facing death threats and character attacks for her militant stance.

Garveyism and the NAACP

Marcus Garvey founded the Universal Negro Improvement Association promoting Black nationalism, Pan-Africanism, economic self-sufficiency, and "Back to Africa" movement. UNIA reached 2-4 million members. The NAACP, co-founded by W.E.B. Du Bois, pursued integration through legal challenges and political lobbying. Membership grew from 9,000 (1917) to 100,000 (1930). These organizations represented different strategies—separation versus integration—for advancing African American rights.

Why did the Ku Klux Klan experience a resurgence in the 1920s, and what impact did it have on American society?

- A. The KKK had no significant presence in the 1920s, although historical sources do not support this conclusion and fails to account for key developments in the broader context, but the historical evidence paints a more nuanced picture
- B. The new KKK expanded targets to Catholics, Jews, and immigrants, reached 4-5 million members nationwide, influenced elections, promoted violence, and reflected widespread nativist and racist sentiments before scandals caused decline
- C. The KKK only operated in the South, which does not align with the documented historical record despite the fact that multiple contemporary sources contradict this, though this interpretation lacks supporting historical evidence
- D. The KKK focused only on African Americans, but contemporary accounts suggest a different explanation and oversimplifies the complex factors at work during this period, which ignores significant political and cultural developments of the era

[DOK 3 • item u1-us35-dok3-tc • pre-field-test]

Compare the different approaches of Ida B. Wells, Marcus Garvey, and the NAACP in fighting for African American rights.

- A. All three used identical approaches, which does not align with the documented historical record, but contemporary accounts and primary sources suggest otherwise and does not reflect the scholarly consensus on this topic, which does not align with the documented historical record
- B. None of these figures had significant impact, but this oversimplifies the complex factors at work, which does not align with the documented historical record, but contemporary accounts and primary sources suggest otherwise, which represents a common misconception about this historical period
- C. They all opposed civil rights, but this oversimplifies the complex factors at work when examined alongside the available primary and secondary sources, which represents a common misconception about this historical period and fails to account for key developments in the broader context
- D. Wells used investigative journalism to expose lynching; Garvey promoted Black nationalism, economic self-sufficiency, and separatism; NAACP pursued integration through legal challenges—representing diverse strategies from documentation to separation to integration

Major Figures and Their Roles

John T. Scopes was a 24-year-old high school teacher in Dayton, Tennessee who volunteered to test the Butler Act. William Jennings Bryan, three-time presidential candidate and fundamentalist champion, led the prosecution. Clarence Darrow, famous criminal lawyer and religious skeptic, led the defense. Judge John Raulston favored the prosecution. H.L. Mencken covered the trial for national audiences, coining the term "Monkey Trial."

Arguments Against Evolution (Prosecution)

The prosecution argued that the Bible is the literal word of God and scientifically accurate. They claimed evolution undermined religious faith and moral behavior. They asserted that parents and taxpayers should control school curriculum. Traditional religious values were deemed necessary for social order, and schools should teach established truth, not controversial theories.

Arguments For Evolution (Defense)

The defense argued that evolution was supported by overwhelming scientific evidence. Teachers should be free to teach accepted scientific theories. Separation of church and state prohibited establishing religious doctrine in schools. Students needed modern scientific education to compete. Many Christians already accepted evolution as God's method of creation.

Trial Outcome and Immediate Impact

Scopes was convicted and fined $100, though the conviction was later overturned on a technicality. The Butler Act remained in effect until 1967. Darrow's cross-examination of Bryan exposed inconsistencies in Biblical literalism. The trial became a media circus broadcast on radio. Afterward, publishers removed evolution from textbooks, and many teachers avoided the subject for decades.

Long-term Legacy

The Scopes Trial became a symbol of science versus religion conflict. It established templates for ongoing debates about curriculum control and academic freedom. The trial portrayed religious conservatives as anti-intellectual, reinforcing regional stereotypes about the South. It foreshadowed later Supreme Court cases on religion in schools and inspired cultural works including "Inherit the Wind."

Tennessee enacted statewide prohibition in 1909, a full decade before the 18th Amendment. During the national Prohibition era, Tennessee's mountainous terrain became a haven for moonshiners, and bootlegging was widespread in rural areas. Memphis, with its river access, was a hub for illegal alcohol distribution.

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

Implementation and Intended Effects

The 18th Amendment (1919) prohibited manufacture, sale, and transportation of alcohol. The Volstead Act defined "intoxicating liquors" as containing over 0.5% alcohol. The temperance movement, religious groups, and progressive reformers supported Prohibition to reduce crime, improve health, strengthen families, and increase worker productivity. Only 1,500 federal agents were available for enforcement.

Rise of Organized Crime

Illegal alcohol created enormous profits with relatively low risk. Al Capone controlled Chicago operations with an estimated $60 million annual income. Organized crime bribed police, judges, and politicians. Gang warfare including the St. Valentine's Day Massacre (1929) demonstrated violence. Criminal organizations developed national networks and diversified into gambling and other illegal activities.

Bootlegging Methods and Consequences

Alcohol was produced through home distillation ("bathtub gin"), stolen and redistilled industrial alcohol, smuggling from Canada and Caribbean, and abuse of medicinal and religious exemptions. Rumrunners, cars, and trucks distributed illegal alcohol. Poisonous industrial alcohol killed thousands. Widespread bribery undermined law enforcement, and only 5% of illegal alcohol was estimated to be intercepted.

Speakeasies and Social Culture

Speakeasies were secret bars in basements and disguised establishments, often requiring passwords for entry. They featured jazz music, dancing, and diverse clientele mixing social classes and sometimes races. Women drank publicly in unprecedented numbers. Speakeasies promoted flapper culture and created modern nightclub atmosphere. They represented open defiance of Prohibition law.

End of Prohibition

The Great Depression made alcohol tax revenue attractive. Public opinion blamed Prohibition for organized crime. Obvious enforcement failure undermined the law. The 21st Amendment (1933) repealed Prohibition, returning alcohol regulation to states. Criminal networks established during Prohibition persisted for decades, and the experiment demonstrated limitations of legislating moral behavior.

- A. Prohibition was clearly beneficial overall, despite the fact that multiple sources contradict this view, although this overlooks critical economic and social factors involved, which represents a common misconception about this historical period
- B. Prohibition created organized crime, caused deaths from poisonous alcohol, corrupted officials, overwhelmed law enforcement, and undermined respect for law while failing to stop drinking—its harms far outweighed any benefits
- C. Prohibition had no significant effects, which represents a common misconception about the period, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era, though this interpretation lacks supporting historical evidence
- D. Prohibition successfully reduced alcohol consumption, though this interpretation lacks supporting historical evidence, though this interpretation lacks supporting historical evidence, and this view has been largely revised by modern historical research

Standard US.38 — Credit, Consumerism & Financial Speculation

TN Academic Standard US.38: Analyze the changes in the economy and culture of the U.S. as a result of credit expansion, consumerism, and financial speculation.

LEARNING TARGETS — I can...

- I can analyze the changes in the economy and culture of the United States as a result of credit expansion, consumerism, and financial speculation.

Lenses for this standard: Economics • History

CORE PATH — the same for every student

Same rigor for everyone: analyze the sources and vocabulary, then show what you learned on the Practice Quiz and the CER.

UDL and MTSS give you flexible ways in — they never lower the bar.

Check yourself against the learning targets on the Cornell Notes page.

SET YOUR GOAL (self-direction)

My goal for this standard — what will I be able to do, and how will I show it?

HOOK — think before you dig in

Credit, Consumerism & Financial Speculation: Analyze the changes in the economy and culture of the U.S. as a result of credit expansion, consumerism, and financial speculation. Who gained, who was left out — and why does it still matter?

ACTIVATE — what do you already know or wonder?

Jot what you already know or want to find out about this standard. You'll come back to it.

PREVIEW & PREDICT

Which learning target will be hardest, and why? Connect it to the unit's big question: who shared in the boom, and who was left out or pushed back?

Activity 1 — Vocabulary (Part A: Reference / Word Bank) — US.38 ~10 min

Use this word bank throughout the standard. The Spanish column supports access, not translation of assessment.

Term	Student-friendly meaning	Spanish
Buying on Credit	The practice of purchasing goods with borrowed money repaid over time in installments, which fueled 1920s consumer spending.	Compra a Crédito
Consumerism	A culture of increased purchasing of consumer goods, driven in the 1920s by mass production, national advertising, and installment credit.	Consumismo
Stock Speculation	The practice of buying stocks - frequently on margin with borrowed money - in the hope of selling at a higher price for quick profit.	Especulación Bursátil
Automobile Impact	The widespread adoption of cars in the 1920s transformed American society, creating suburbs, highways, tourism, and related industries like gas stations, motels, and drive-in restaurants.	Impacto del Automóvil
Assembly Line	A manufacturing method where workers remain stationary while products move past them on a conveyor belt, with each worker performing one specific task, dramatically increasing efficiency.	Línea de Ensamblaje
Motion Pictures	Silent and "talkie" films that became America's most popular entertainment in the 1920s, creating celebrity culture and Hollywood as the film capital of the world.	Imágenes en Movimiento

Summary — In your own words (2–3 sentences)

PROGRESS CHECK • one question

Analyze how credit expansion, consumerism, and speculation worked together to create both prosperity and economic vulnerability.

- A. These factors were unrelated, although this overlooks critical economic and social factors, but the historical evidence paints a more nuanced picture and oversimplifies the complex factors at work during this period
- B. These factors created only prosperity, not vulnerability, but the historical record tells a more complex story and fails to account for key developments in the broader context, although historical sources do not support this conclusion
- C. Credit enabled consumption and speculation, which drove production and stock prices higher, encouraging more lending in a cycle that created apparent prosperity while building unsustainable debt and inflated asset values that would collapse
- D. Economic vulnerability came from foreign sources, which ignores key developments that shaped the outcome and does not reflect the scholarly consensus on this topic, which does not align with the documented historical record

Activity 4 — Close Read — US.38 ~15 min

Reading type: History Hack-authored instructional synthesis. This is not a primary source. Builds SSP.03 (synthesize) and SSP.05 (historical awareness).

CORE PATH — read one chunk at a time

Credit Expansion and Economic Growth

Installment buying ("buy now, pay later") made expensive goods affordable. Consumer debt increased from $3.3 billion (1920) to $7.6 billion (1929). By 1929, 75% of cars were purchased on credit. Banks and retailers offered loans for automobiles, appliances, and homes. Credit-driven demand increased production and employment, but also accumulated unsustainable debt levels.

Consumerism and Cultural Change

Purchasing goods became central to American identity and status. Mass production made standardized products available to broad populations. Advertising created brand loyalty through emotional appeals rather than just product information. Lifestyle marketing sold products as means to achieve desired lifestyles. Success became increasingly measured by possessions rather than character.

Financial Speculation

Investors could buy stocks with as little as 10% down payment (buying on margin). Speculation fever meant ordinary Americans invested life savings in the stock market. Stock prices rose far beyond companies' actual worth, creating an investment bubble. Margin requirements meant small price declines triggered forced selling that accelerated market drops.

Interconnections Creating Vulnerability

Credit enabled consumer purchases and stock investments, driving production and corporate profits higher. Rising asset values encouraged more lending. This cycle created an unsustainable bubble. Warning signs included overproduction, income inequality limiting purchasing power, and debt levels beyond what the economy could support.

Technology and Advertising Impact

Radio and magazines enabled national advertising campaigns that used psychological appeals. Household appliances—refrigerators, washing machines, vacuum cleaners—changed domestic life. Automobiles made middle-class families mobile. These technologies, promoted through advertising, created consumer expectations and desires that drove purchasing and economic growth.

Key terms first: Buying on Credit, Consumerism. Read once for the gist, then again for evidence.

CLOSE-READ EVIDENCE LAB — for each question: quote the EVIDENCE from the passage above, then write YOUR ANSWER (or answer aloud / diagram it).

[DOK 2 • item us38a-q2 • pre-field-test]

What role did consumerism play in shaping American culture and values during the 1920s?

- A. Consumerism made purchasing central to American identity, created brand loyalty through advertising, shifted success measures from character to possessions, and established material acquisition as a path to happiness
- B. Consumerism had no cultural impact, which does not align with the documented historical record and oversimplifies the complex factors at work during this period, and this view has been largely revised by modern historical research
- C. Americans rejected consumer culture, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era, although this overlooks critical economic and social factors involved, which does not align with the documented historical record
- D. Consumerism was limited to urban areas, although this view has been largely discredited by scholars when examined alongside the available primary and secondary sources, but contemporary accounts and primary sources suggest otherwise

[DOK 2 • item us38a-q3 • pre-field-test]

How did financial speculation in the stock market create economic instability?

- A. Stock speculation was carefully regulated, but the historical record tells a more complex story, but the historical evidence paints a more nuanced picture, but closer analysis reveals a more complicated historical reality
- B. Buying on margin with only 10% down inflated stock prices beyond real value, and when prices dropped, margin calls forced panic selling that accelerated market decline, creating conditions for collapse
- C. Only wealthy investors participated in speculation, although historical sources do not support this conclusion, and this view has been largely revised by modern historical research
- D. Speculation had no effect on market stability, which does not reflect the consensus among historians, which does not align with the documented historical record, but the historical evidence paints a more nuanced picture

[DOK 3 • item u1-us38-dok3-tc • pre-field-test]

How did credit expansion and installment buying change American purchasing patterns and economic behavior?

- A. Installment buying made expensive goods affordable, with consumer debt doubling and 75% of cars purchased on credit by 1929, fundamentally changing how Americans acquired goods while accumulating unsustainable debt
- B. Credit had minimal impact on consumer behavior, but the historical record tells a more complex story, which represents a common misconception about this historical period and does not reflect the scholarly consensus on this topic
- C. Americans avoided using credit in the 1920s, which does not align with the documented historical record despite the fact that multiple contemporary sources contradict this, and this view has been largely revised by modern historical research
- D. Credit was only available to wealthy consumers, despite limited evidence supporting this interpretation, which contradicts the primary source evidence from this era, but the historical evidence paints a more nuanced picture

Your Tennessee Connection

TENNESSEE CONNECTION • THE SCOPES TRIAL & THE GRAND OLE OPRY

Tennessee sat at the center of the 1920s. In the summer of 1925, the little town of Dayton hosted the Scopes “Monkey Trial” (US.36): high-school teacher John Scopes was tried for teaching evolution in violation of the state’s Butler Act, with Clarence Darrow defending and William Jennings Bryan prosecuting. It became the first American trial broadcast live on national radio — the era’s clash between science and religion, and between modern cities and rural tradition, played out in a Tennessee courtroom. That same year, WSM radio in Nashville began the barn-dance program that became the Grand Ole Opry (US.30), and Nashville grew into the home of country music while Memphis’s Beale Street shaped the blues.

Reflect (RESPONSE CHOICE): How does a local story change the way you understand a national event? Answer by writing, recording, or diagramming.

Think Like a Test-Writer (unit review — open to all)

You met a quick “think like a test-writer” prompt in every standard. Here is the full how-to, once, plus room to write your best questions for the whole unit.

HOW TO WRITE A DOK-3 QUESTION

DOK-3 = strategic thinking: the reader must analyze, compare, evaluate, or justify using evidence — and there should be more than one defensible answer (not a fact you can just look up).

Sentence starters: “Why did _____ lead to _____?” • “Which mattered more — _____ or _____ — and why?” • “What is the BEST evidence that _____?” • “Evaluate whether _____.” • “Defend or challenge: _____.”

Frame: [Analyze / Evaluate / Justify] + [something from this unit] + “using evidence.”

Quick check: does my question make the reader THINK and use evidence? If yes, it’s DOK-3.

The Roaring Twenties — Who Roared, and Who Was Left Out?

This section complicates the “Roaring Twenties” narrative: who shared in the boom and the new freedoms, and who was left out or pushed back. It is History Hack-authored instructional synthesis grounded in this unit’s sourced record — not a primary source.

Migration & the Harlem Renaissance

Millions of Black Americans left the Jim Crow South for Northern and Midwestern cities in the Great Migration (US.28), building the Harlem Renaissance’s outpouring of music, literature, and art (US.33) — even while facing discrimination, housing segregation, and violence.

A New Consumer Culture

Cars, radio, movies, aviation, and electricity remade daily life (US.29, US.31, US.32); buying on installment credit fueled a consumer boom (US.38). The prosperity reached urban and white Americans far more than farmers, and Black and immigrant workers.

Changing Roles for Women

The 19th Amendment and new social freedoms reshaped women’s public lives — the “flapper” became a symbol of the decade (US.34) — though the changes reached some women much more than others.

Fear and Backlash

The boom came with reaction: the Red Scare and Palmer Raids, the Sacco-Vanzetti case, and a revived Ku Klux Klan (US.35); Prohibition and the bootlegging it spawned (US.37); and the Scopes Trial's clash over evolution, science, and religion (US.36).

Residual note (known follow-up): sourced visuals and named Key-Figure entries for these histories remain pending.

Unit Reflection

Return to the unit's big question: in the 1920s, who shared in the boom and the new freedoms, and who was left out or pushed back? Write a final claim with two pieces of evidence from different standards.
